The story concerns Arthur Phelps, who meets Rosa Duchene, a famous French dancer, and falls violently in love with her. Due to a trick by a cafe girl named Poll, Phelps is blinded, and in a spirit of jest Poll comes to him pretending to be his adored Rosa. Eventually they are married, Phelps believing he is married to Rosa Duchene. An operation saves his sight, and the truth is revealed to him. In spite of the fact that Poll has sacrificed her life for his comfort he throws her aside and immediately sets out to find his French dancer. The search leads him to Siam, where wonderful scenes in the Temple are shown. There, a series of incidents, culminating in a fight with the sacred crocodiles in the Temple pit, takes place, and Phelps realizes the selfishness of Rosa and turns back to seek out Poll, who in turn has been besought by Roderiquez. The latter, jealous of Phelps' return, threatens to kill him, when Poll steps in the way and almost receives the death blow. Her recovery and reuniting with Phelps bring the picture to a happy ending.
